FIFTH SUNDAY OF ORDINARY TIME ~ 10 FEBRUARY 2019

When the Lord passes by in our lives, he always says a word to us and makes us a promise. But he also asks us to give up something and entrusts us with a mission. Pope Francis recalled this during the Mass celebrated on the morning of Thursday, 5 September 2013 in the Chapel of St. Martha's Guest House.

Commenting on the story of the "miraculous draft of fishes," told by Luke (5.1-11) in the gospel passage read during the liturgy, the Pope remembered St. Augustine, who constantly "repeats a sentence which has always struck me." He says: 'I'm afraid when the Lord passes by.' Why? Because I'm afraid he will pass by and I won't realise it'. And the Lord passes by in our lives, just as he does here in the lives of Peter, James and John."

In this instance the Lord passed by in the lives of his disciples by doing a miracle. But, the Pope pointed out, "Jesus doesn't always pass by in our lives with a miracle." Even though he always makes himself felt, he added. "Always. And when the Lord passes by, something always happens, like what happened here: he tells us something, makes us feel something, then he says a word to us which is a promise. He asks something from us in our way of life: to give something, to let something go. And then he gives us a mission."

These three aspects of Jesus' passing through our lives – telling us "a word which is a promise," asking us "to give up something," and entrusting us "with a mission" - appear clearly in this passage from Luke's gospel. The Holy Father stressed particularly Peter's reaction to Jesus' miracle: "Simon, who was so passionate, went up to Jesus and said: 'Depart from me, Lord, for I am sinful man'. He really felt this because he was like that. And what does Jesus say to him? 'Don't be afraid.'"

Such a beautiful word, so often repeated: Don't be afraid, fear not," commented the Pope and added: "And then, and here's the promise he says to Peter: 'I will make you a fisher of men.' Whenever the Lord comes into our lives, when he passes by in our hearts, he says a word to us and gives us a promise: "Go ahead, courage, don't be afraid: you will do this!" 'It's "an invitation to follow him." And "when we hear this invitation and realise that there's something wrong about our lives," the Pope continued, "Jesus invites us to leave it and follow him more closely. That's what happened to the apostles, who left everything, as the gospel says: 'And when they had landed the boats, they left everything and followed him.'" So Christian life is "always following the Lord." But in order to follow him, we must first "hear what he's telling us"; and then "leave what at that moment we have to leave and follow him."

Finally, there's the mission with which Jesus entrusts us. In fact, "he never says: 'Follow me!' without then telling us our mission. He always says: 'Leave and follow me for this.' So if 'we walk along Jesus' road," the Pope declared, "it's in order to do something. That's the mission." It's "a sequence that's repeated even when we go to pray." In fact "our prayers," stresses the Holy Father, "must always have these three moments." First of all, listening to the word of Jesus, a word by which he gives us peace and assures us he is near. Then the moment of our renunciation: we must be ready to "leave something: 'Lord, what do you want me to leave in order to be closer to you?' Perhaps he doesn't say at that moment. But we must ask with generosity." Finally, the moment of mission: prayer always helps us to understand what "we have to do."

So that sums up our prayer: "Hearing the Lord, having the courage to give up something and finally undertaking a mission. That doesn't mean we won't have to face temptations. Peter, recalled Pope Francis, sinned gravely when he denied Jesus. But then the Lord forgave him. James and John sinned by careerism. But the Lord forgave them too. So it's important to pray while keeping these three moments in mind. "We can ask the apostles, to give us the grace always to pray listening to what Jesus says and to his promise; to make us willing to leave what prevents us from following Jesus closely; and to open our hearts to receive his mission."
